THE EPIDEMIOLOGICAL IMAGINATION
 Edited by John Ashton

Public health is a complex and rapidly changing area. This book provides a critical and imaginative approach to the study of public health. It examines the historical and contemporary context of public health, and the role of the state in the provision of health care. The book also explores the role of the individual in the prevention of disease and the promotion of health.

When you read this book you will be able to: understand the historical and contemporary context of public health; evaluate the role of the state in the provision of health care; and explore the role of the individual in the prevention of disease and the promotion of health.

Rationing in Action

It is becoming increasingly obvious that there are not enough resources in the health service to do everything that is possible for all patients. Most doctors accept that some kind of priority setting or rationing of health care is inevitable. But the burning issues arise: how should the available resources be distributed? Is it, for example, more important to finance hip replacement or screening for breast cancer? Who should make these painful decisions? How can public views be accommodated?

Rationing in Action, grown out of a conference organised by the BMJ, King's and King's Fund, discusses the inevitability of rationing, the challenges it poses to patients, doctors, and managers, and possible solutions. Written by doctors, managers, politicians, economists, and philosophers, this is an important book for anyone involved in decision making in medicine.
