

Epidemiology of Work Related Diseases

Edited by J Corbett McDonald

Death, disability, economic loss...

Work related disease and trauma affect working men and women worldwide and have been the subject of extensive research for many years

Now this comprehensive and thought-provoking book brings together a team of internationally recognised experts to provide a review of current epidemiological knowledge in this important area.

- Edited by J Corbett McDonald, a well known authority in epidemiological research, with contributions from around the world
- Critically assesses the available scientific evidence for the main disease groups
- Essential reading for all concerned with the causation and prevention of the widespread and serious effects - immediate and long term - of work on health.
- Fully referenced throughout

Topics covered include: Occupational cancer; asthma; electro-magnetic fields and ionising radiation; noise and vibration; skin conditions; mental stress; work in pregnancy; agricultural hazards; back and limb disorders; neurobehavioural effects; research methodology and evaluation.
